there. And as I listen to this, I was pulled into the allure. And as Senator Landis introduces it, it sounds like P.T. Barnum just pulling me in on that midway again. And I feel like, oh, this is going to be good, because I, as somebody that's a self-appointed guardian of the Environmental Trust and the Education Trust, want to protect those funds, and have done so repeatedly here. So to have some of that enshrined in the constitution and protected so I don't have to keep fighting the battles to protect it is a great allure, and it does draw me in. And I was certainly open to that originally, and wanting to do that. But as I look at the reality of this, I find myself on the midway, right in front of the old shell game, and there are three shells in front of me. Now, from past experience, I know there's only one pea under those three. But I'm led to believe that under one is education, under one is the environment, and under the third is the State Fair. But in looking at the reality of it, there's only one pea, and that's the State Fair, and that's the only thing that's going to really be ensured of getting the money and benefiting, and the other two are going to be shortchanged, because we're taking some of their money away to make sure that there's a guarantee for the State Fair. That allure drew me in. But the reality is, the old lessons I learned on the midway, it isn't all that it seems to be. And all that it seems to be is starting to soak in to me. I'm not sure this is a good thing for the state. I also don't like muddying up the constitution. But I was beginning to be willing to compromise that. I don't think I'm willing to compromise that. I think we do need to protect the constitution. I used that argument with Senator Schrock, and I've used it in the past. And so far, I don't think I have done it. I was tempted on this to do it. I was tempted by P.T. Barnum. I was pulled along with the allure. But the reality is setting in. And at this point, I don't see those guarantees. I see money coming away from the environment and education, and I see the only real benefit guaranteed going to the State Fair. That's not enough of an allure. And at this point, I think I would support the bracket. But I'm not going to have a chance to vote on this bracket motion. And here's a place where I might be agreeing with my seatmate behind me. And if there is any extra oats, Senator Tyson, I have a live horse I'd sure like to have it for. Thank you.
